

To whom it may concern --

To modify the FCC rules regarding cross-ownership will do a great disservice to the average citizen. News about the world should not be filtered through one large corporation's viewpoint; in this case, as in many others, competition ensures product quality. The quality of news lies in its objectivity, diversity, and potential to encourage social development. Allowing corporations to monopolize news markets will sabotage these qualities.